Topic: Some people believe that visitors to other countries should follow local customs and behaviour. Others disagree and think the host country should welcome cultural differences.

Discuss both these views and give your own opinion.

Cultural differences have always been associated with concerns for both visitors and host countries. Some people think that tourists should respect local customs and behaviour of the destination, while others believe that various cultures should be welcomed by host countries. There are many arguments supporting both views. (تکرار بیش از حد کلمات) (topic)

It is widely believed that people travel to experience. In fact, what makes an individual keen on visiting other lands is mostly the passion and interest in understanding and feeling whatever they have never known about them. That is why local traditions and behaviours are considered as tourist attractions. Therefore, following these local rules and customs is not only a new experience which makes a trip memorable for travellers but also is a kind of respect to the host country's legal system that if being neglected will destabilise the societies' social security.

However, from others points of view, cultural differences should be respected/recognized/pleased by destination countries, since the tourism industry has become extremely economically beneficial these days. (Making visitors limited) limiting visitors by forcing/obliging them to follow the rules which they are unaccustomed with, may be annoying for them and reduce their willingness to travel to that place again re-travel or even persuading/persuade others to visit that country. In addition, it would be a good opportunity for both visitors and hosts to become familiar with other cultures and in some cases put an end to their hostile views about others' beliefs.

Personally, I think travel is one of the most important ways of cultural interaction. As long as both visitors and hosts respect each others' beliefs and rules, they will benefit from so many/a great many/numerous advantages that each (party/side) introduces to the other.
