

Increasing the price of petrol is the best way to solve growing traffic and pollution problems.

To what extent do you agree or disagree?

What other measures do you think might be effective?

Traffic and its consequent pollution as its first consequence have been recognized as an issue of broad concern among megacities' / mega cities' citizens. Although attempts have been made done to face it, the problem is still there.alive. Some believes that raising rising the fuel price is the best course of action to perform. others, however, myself included think that not only is it not the best way but also it degenerates the situation. A Combination of actions is necessary in order to address it.

Traffic as the cause of air, sound and visual sight pollution as well as being responsible for wasting the huge amounts of money and time is a serious problem and for sure a numbers of reasons cause it for example, lack of management and coordination between responsible organizations such as municipality, the traffic police and the transportation system . Moreover, the quality of fuels plays an important role in this way, so cooperation of the oil organization surfaces comes to the story. Another perspective goes through the culture. When citizens think beyond their own needs considering the society's benefits and giving more value to the public welfare the process of addressing these kinds of issues will be more fruitful for instance, using public transport while they will be more comfortable if they drive, so the solution lies lays in education.

Hence, the question is how petrol price rising will help in this way? It creates just more havoc among individuals' lives then, the more pressure, the more dissatisfaction and less contribution in governmental projects and the process will continues without any useful alteration.

To sum up, traffic and pollution problems are the signs of deeper more deep and more fundamental destructions such as mismanagement lack of management and contribution between responsible agencies, for which society members pay the its' costs, so increasing petrol prices is sowing the seeds of destruction but the solution lies lays in education.
