

Melissa

Some people believe that it is impossible to help everyone in need around the world. That is why governments should only focus on helping people of their own country. To what extent do you agree or disagree with this statement? Give your own opinion and relevant examples.

Globalization provides us with many facilities for developed countries to help all the people around the world and also, developing countries. However, some argues that developed countries should concentrate on their own nation instead of investing money in the poor countries.

In spite of the increase in increasing of accommodations in wealthy countries, joblessness and poverty are still obvious yet. Thus, each government has a big responsibility for their own citizens. Then providing social welfare and facilities for the homeland should be in the first priority for the government. After that first-world nations could lunch some organizations regarding aiding people all around the world in terms of the education, finding a suitable job, discovering the talents and also detecting the solution to overcome the poverty.

Reaching this demanded is not achievable unless all the developed countries raise the amount of the trade in most of the fields. Likewise, wealthier nationsality could send out some expert people to third-world countries and teaching some majors to boost the knowledge of the poor nations in order to provide a situation where that developing countries achieve their purpose easier and stand on their feet without others' help helping others. Besides, working unpaid by poor people is one of the ways for compensation and havehaving a benefit for rich countries as well.

All in all, aiding globally is doable by cooperating all developed countries cooperating and for gaining a the better education system and having a better life some poor people can do some extra jobs in exchange. for amends.