

Some people think that teenager years are the happiest times of most of people's lives, while others believe that adults' life brings more happiness, in spite of greater responsibilities.

Discuss both these views and give your own opinion.

Is happiness related to financially independent, job or responsibilities? Do people who are sad and hopeless cite maturity as momentous aspect?

In every period of life we live in a special situation .Although very tremendous excitements of learning and carrying out new skills and new experiments, not responsibilities and pure friendship make teenagers happiness , blurry future can influence their emotions. For instance, what will they do for their living? What really happened to them if their parents pass away ? And many other questions with unclear answers.

Unlike teenagers, most adults aren't enthusiastic to carry out new experiments .Occupation and gaining money are pleasant enough to them. More co-workers and colleagues, ~~less-fewer~~ close friends are is the outcome of financial independence .Not only can a monotonous life ~~can~~ exhaust them, but also can reduce their happiness and ~~satisfying~~ satisfaction .However, there aren't many unanswered questions and unclear future too.

In conclusion, happiness is more related to mentality than age .Many times we face in newspapers and media ~~the~~ teenagers committing suicide and an elderly winning a running competition. It's up to us to ~~on our own~~ live a happy life ~~happiness life~~ or pick a sad one ~~sadness one~~.
