Not to get married during study

To be a student is a fantastic opportunity to live an adventurous life meaning lots of experiences which need myriads of time. Add the significant requirements of having a family and responsibilities coming after that to this. Therefore, I do prefer not to be married during my study to avoid jeopardizing ~~them the~~ both. I will elaborate my point of view as well as and so the reasons in this essay.

On the one hand, establishing new connections, traveling and visiting different places and different people, practicing and training and many others can comprise the inventory of this very juncture of life, that is to say, study can be just a part of this. I myself traveled half of my country during my bachelor's degree. I have visited places that I could not imagine ~~they~~ can even exist. The people who had untold distinctions, different religions, different faces, different jobs and even different languages. It really helped me to expanding my experiences and touch the world beyond the school walls. But all of that needed time and lack of responsibilities which I cannot picture suppose that with having a family.

On the other hand, it is never an easy task to start/establish making a family. They need multilateral supports. A real partner should be always there for the other. For a simple example just picture a sad wife needing a free-standing favor of her husband. They should prepare themselves financially ly-wise and emotionally to serve each other. These circumstances worsen exaggerated with a child who needs his or her parents every moment of every day. An appropriate home, healthy food and suitable clothes are just basic needs which have has to be provided considering the 'Maslow Needs Hierarchy'. I can feel the pressure of providing for being reliable to family by talking about that and I wonder how that is possible to make it besides studying.

To make a long story short, neither studentship nor parenthood is to be taken lightly. to be a student, nor to be a husband or wife could have been faced negligibly. They both need time, attention and interest. Hence as far as I am concerned it will be better not to mix overlap them especially for youngsters.
