

Research indicates that the characteristics we are born with have much more influence on our personality and development than any experiences we may have in our life.

Which do you consider to be the major influence?

In today's modern world, numerous reserches have been conducted around the world in order to ~~prove improve~~ that ~~the~~ characteristics are is more important than experiences and are much more effective in indivituality and formation of our life. It is obvious that every one is unique, but I think we should not ignore the fact that experiences have a greater impact on one's personality and progression/growth.

Undoubtedly, people are born with different characteristics; some people are born with an easygoing character and the others might be born with.... a melancholic one. People could not choose their genetic traits characters and ~~these this~~ indivituality will grow up and develop more as they grow up get adult. Therefore, many experts belive that genetic features/qualities/characters have a considerable effect on personal identity.

On the other hand, situations the poeple grow up in are-growth-in are is extremely pivotal to their personality. it means that, there are many factors/divisors that have a significant influence on people's characteristics such as family condition, communities, education, work experiences and travelling. For instance, a person might be born as a sanguine/sociable person, but he might be raised rise-in a broken home-family. As a consequence, he could become a pessimistic person when he grows up because of the family situation.

Accordingly, I agree that genetic characteristics have some influence on a person's personality and their behaviour and life style. But from the other point of view, ilfe experiences have more substantial efficacy/impression on to our indivituality. eventually it is important for us to choose the living place, work place and friends in our daily life live.