

It is important for children to learn the difference between right and wrong at an early age.

Punishment is necessary to help them learn this distinction.

To what extent do you agree or disagree with this option?

What sort of punishment should parents and teachers be allowed to use to teach good behavior to children?

Punishment is one of the major subjects always debated between people leading to several strong arguments and counter-arguments. It is unanimously acknowledged that children learn how to deal with the world from early ages. Various genetic differentiation and different parenting styles result in inheriting several characteristics including some misbehavior.

From one point of view, children in the golden age era start to realize the environment around them, observing and imitating the behavior of people. Then, they try to socializeing with the others. In such vital age range, if they don't understand the impacts of their fault, they will get spoiled. Permitting them to do whatever they want makes them gain/develop/form a misjudgment about themselves. There are strong beliefs that they need to attain certain etiquettes in life by parents introducing punishments whilst misbehaving.

On the other hand, childhood life prepares mankind towards adulthood. Children's confidence and self-esteem is built from the moment they are born. Therefore, it is important to bringing them up wisely. Sever punishments as a reply to their inappropriate behavior weaken their personality and bring undesirable and irreversible impacts to their life in the long run.

There is always a question raised about the mode and severity of punishment. It seems that some light types of that could hint the child to improve his manner. This can be illustrated by some examples. If a child doesn't brush his teeth before sleeping, we could disallow him to eat a cake or chocolate or ~~lesson-~~ reduce his pocket money in case of wrongdoing.

In conclusion, for essential decisions like this issue, psychological considerations deserve to be foremost in our mind.
