

Reducing global environmental damage should be handled by government rather than individuals? To what extent do you agree or disagree?

The damage to the environment is increasing at an alarming rate due to human activities. Even though, a great deal of effort is now being made by governments all over the world, individuals also have a major role to play in minimizing global environmental hazards.

To begin with, one of the main reasons is uncontrolled use of automobiles; cutting down the use of private cars, and promoting the public transportation could be beneficial to/for decreasing the air pollution. Another proper vehicle could be bicycles; this striking, old vehicle not only reduces pollution, but also is a healthy exercise which prevents the risk of obesity.

Another cause/reason sake of this unsavory matter is certainly industrialization. This issue is one of the fundamental causes which yields a lot of irreparable devastations to the environment and also is the origin of the staggering number existence of factories which produce many variable toxic and dangerous gases besides a huge volume of waste. Governments are liable to put pressure on manufacturers to produce more eco-friendly products. Likewise, they can educate the people to use these kinds of commodities. The more educated people are, the more advantageous it is for the environment.

Levying taxes on the factories which depositing the chemicals and poisonous emissions, governments with the cooperation of some relevant organizations also could be effective in beneficial to decreasing detrimental waste.

To sum up, if people collaborate/cooperate/integrate with the government and similarly think up some strategies, surely this kind of eco-friendly efforts lead to a much more better and more considerable outcome.

AREFE