

Some people say that it is possible to tell a lot about a person's culture and character from their choice of clothes.

Do you agree or disagree?

It is really common among people that they judge the personality of another the-other person merely by looking at his or her appearance. Whenever a person wants to choose his fashion style not only does he unconsciously considers his ethnic background but also his attitude plays a major role but to be realistic, the way of dressing cannot define a person totally correct.

Psychologically speaking, it has been proven that our brain decides whether or not to like someone ~~or not~~ who we meet for the first time just by analyzing both his face and his clothes in a the matter of seconds. It is obvious this quick analyzing is not reliable due to since/because the brain's ~~witnesses evidence is are~~ quiet limited. As a result, making a mistake is inevitable.

Besides the culture and the character, there are a flock of parameters affecting ~~on~~ someone's style; most notably, the money. As a matter of facts the amount of somebody's revenues can change his appearance but it's hard to say whether it would have a major influence on either his beliefs or his thoughts.

What can really help us to know each other deeply is making a conversation. The more an individual speaks, the more we can identify him. Furthermore, tracking his attitude towards difficulties, we would be able to judge him more correctly.

The main conclusion to be drawn is that albeit the way we represent ourselves by choosing the style of our clothes has a great influence on the others' perceptions about us, from the in writer's perspective it cannot clarify our truly-true culture and personal behavior.
