

Some people prefer to spend their lives doing the same things and avoiding change. Others, however, think that change is always a good thing.

Discuss both these views and give your own opinion.

During the last decades we have confronted the pace of development in technology and science in the world, which have caused many changes in life style and the way individuals behave towards it. So in this situation always there have been two types of people. Firstly, ~~those the people who~~ opting to behave in the same ways ~~always~~ they have always done and secondly, -Secondly, those the people who choose to do the things in a distinct manner.

On the one hand, we should know that changes are not always elective because we live in the world that is evolving revolving rapidly because of recent advances in technology. Therefore, whether we want or not, sooner or later we have to move with these kinds of evolutions which are required to continue our lives. In this condition there are some people who think that doing the same things, present them with they achieve more safety and security, so they tend to ignore the new development stuffs to try, but to tell the truth they are actually living in denial.

On the other hand, conversion is not always for the better. In other words; although however, changes are inevitable, but development in technology does not bring us the better life necessarily. While many innovations are made by powerful people around the world and it is just to for their benefits and gaining more money/profit.

To sum up, I would say that conversion/variety/alteration can be extremely beneficial/useful/helpful lucrative and pleasant for individuals when they pursue it themselves. However, if Although in the way these changes are imposed on people, they # can be very detrimental.
