

Politicians are more responsible for protection of the environment than individuals. To what extent do you agree or disagree?

Nature conservation has been considered ~~as~~ one of the significant concerns of humankind throughout recent decades. It is every body's duty to help preserve ~~ing~~ the environment, although some people believe that it is up to statesmen to put a lot of effort ~~into saving to save~~ surroundings.

Pondering the fact that politicians are able to enforce rules in order to protect the environment, critics assert that lawmakers could play a pivotal role in creating a framework for individuals which prepares the foundations of securing nature and reducing the greenhouse gases which are baneful to plants. In addition, they can establish long-term programs to guide people and help them to step through a logical plan to decrease the threat of civilization to ~~the~~ surroundings. Besides, it can contain some tips to encourage people to save their living environment and improve their behavior towards their surroundings. Furthermore, they can warn individuals of their destructive manner with their home planet.

Putting the burden of preservation on the government's shoulder, from my point of view and many others', would not spare any individual's obligation to protect the environment. Neither should they forget protecting ~~Mother Earth mother earth~~, nor potential actions which intimidate the surrounding. For instance, people can start a cooperative ~~cooperation correlation~~ with government toward using biodegradable materials for packaging while politicians are preparing ~~the~~ essentials for availability of those materials for wide-spread usage. In addition, individuals can manage to avoid dispersion of waste material especially long-lasting polymer-based ones in nature besides the persuasive acting of lawmakers to encourage people to clear the environment.

In conclusion, protecting the surrounding is neither the solitary duty of individuals, nor the full obligation of politics. In my opinion, all of them must join together as one unique force to reduce the extraordinary nature pollution rate and to make it pure.
