

Some people believe that no one should be allowed to continue working after the age of 65. However, others say there shouldn't be a limitation on the age and anyone should be allowed to work regardless of their age. Discuss both views, give your own opinion and include relevant examples.

Determining a specific age for retirement and enforcing the elderly to put an end to up working for example at the age of 65 has been was recently brought to the center of attention. However, there are still people who are against this proposal due proper considerations.

Opponents assert that these are our venerable seniors who are remarkably sophisticated. They have expertise in their in their career among all the years of experience. Besides, some jobs, such as those which need hand skills handy ones, require/need particular skills that youngsters, however educated they are, could not comply with. In addition, these are still potential workers who can help society to thrive. Aside from all the mentioned facts, their own will should be pondered too. Perhaps they were keen on continuing their jobs, and were not eager to retire while they can still be beneficial yet.

Despite all reasons which opponents opposers have enumerated, many people claim that the older generations s should sooner terminate their work and allow prepare the space for younger ones. This will reduce the unemployment rate lead the rate of joblessness to decrease among newly graduated labour. Moreover, many careers are onerous for the aged ones, and need physical power which are noticeably not suitable for older workers. Thus By this trend not only could younger people find a job more easily, but also their seniors s could benefit from their pension.

Although ignoring repudiating the work and ideas of older employees would appear remorseless to many, I personally think that they deserve a time for themselves and retirement might be their reward after years of uninterrupted efforts which have not been spared to convert our world to a better place to live in. However, if some of them are interested in proceeding their social services while they are still capable, in conditions that they quit before going senile, it will would be of benefit great advantages to the community.

In a nutshell, the salient expertness of our seniors is undeniable. Therefore, if they enthusiastically demand to take for taking steps for their society, under certain circumstances their request should not be abandoned by anybody.
