

Some experts believe that it is better for children to begin learning a foreign language at primary school rather than secondary school.

Do the advantages of this outweigh the disadvantages?

Traditionally, children have begun studying foreign languages at secondary school. But beginning that earlier is recommended by educationalists. To make this decision may create some difficulties for both children and their parents. However, the numerous benefits which these children can enjoy utilize would pale its hardships.

As regards childhood is a golden opportunity to learn an alien language, to acquire that at primary school speeds a child's acquisition of this process. The earlier the time they commence, the more advantageous it is for them. What's more at this time a curriculum of students is lighter than that in secondary school. Nevertheless, they are required to be more organized to manage their time. It is incumbent upon their parents to help them and spare no effort and accompany them patiently.

Since the pupils are obliged to devote their time and energy to studying hard unlike their peers who spend a lot of time to playing games, probably those would complain or throw a tantrum to their parents, although they more likely will appreciate them their- adults in future, Because in at adolescence generally their homework is more and much so heavier, hence they have less time to learn assign a new language. Furthermore, at this age teenagers tend to turn a deaf ear to the advice of the adults around them and as a matter of fact it is the age of puberty when which they are inclined to rebel bully than be obedient.

In conclusion, as language learning especially an international language plays a key role in to interacting with other cultures and as a bigger more advantage this skill benefits society economically, an early exposure to language learning contributes to this these young children's innate abilities should be harnessed to make these benefits more achievable.
