

Whoever controls the media also controls opinions and attitudes of the people and there is little that can be done to rectify this.
To what extent do you agree or disagree?

It is obvious that mass media especially televisions or newspapers like tabloids have major effects on the way people behave and think. In that case I agree to some extent that controlling the programs of media is ineluctable and gives rise to intrusion on people's privacy. ~~of people's~~ life.

Most of the popular media are established by private companies, but in some countries they are controlled by the government or individuals. Furthermore, all of these ~~this~~ managers seek ~~for a~~ great amount of money. besides, they are trying hard to find out a way reaching ~~to~~ their financial goals more easily.

On the other hand, some of the broadcast made by this media not only disturb people's privacy but also publicize false stories. For example if the media intend to report about celebrities they employ paparazzi to follow them everywhere. they go to collect vital assertions. After broadcasting these private stories each conversant viewer recognizes that all of the reports are distorted and changed in a way that the company needs.

However, we should remember that readers or spectators have their own ideas. Although the media can control what is printed, they cannot ~~can-~~ ~~not~~ govern the opinions of an individual. In particular it is of even greater concern that we have become so accepting of being lied to or encountered some form of censorship.

Nevertheless, investigative reports are not a wrong way of finding news, but it is somehow ~~some-how~~ irritating on ~~in~~ different occasions.

To put it simply, governments must proceed against the media which report false or biased news in case of grabbing attention of viewers or earning money.
