

Some people think that all university students should study whatever they like. Others believe that they should only be allowed to study subjects that will be useful in the future, such as those related to science and technology. Discuss both these views and give your own opinion.

A large number of school leavers tend to pursue their goals through tertiary education, which provides them with a vast range of field study choices. While some people argue that university students should be channeled into studying science and technology-related subjects, there are some, who are not on board with this mentality, and believe that we should give young members a free rein to follow their favorite fields.

The first group, who does not agree with the autonomy of choosing the study field for university students, accepts that just scientific and technological issues can offer a wider scope of employability for the young individuals. Moreover, with ~~the~~ technology on the rise, there would be more positions for research proposed by the growing industries. For instance, a considerable number of parents force their adults to choose an engineering major or medical science, since they think these fields are accompanied by the higher social position, which they can be proud of. In addition, they assert their great income is another advantage which is worthy of consideration.

On the other hand, the second group holds this opinion that from ~~a the~~ psychological point of view, students should have ~~the~~ freedom to opt for their favorite study subjects, and believe a prosperous society needs artists, athletes, cooks ~~and so forth~~ as well. They argue that the youth have the certain potential to be effective for their community, hence giving way to them and respecting their way of thinking.

In a nutshell, from my point of view, which is the same as the second group, providing well-organized facilities for the students and ~~giving~~ a free hand to them would benefit the whole society. The young individuals would be motivated to push the envelope in their life, if they choose their future path at their discretion.
