Universities should accept equal numbers of male and female students in every subject.

To what extent do you agree or disagree?

In some universities courses are allocated to students according to gender ~~there is a sex assessment about some subject~~. Based on this rule, the authorities, for example, accept twice as many men as women ~~men twice as much women~~ or vice versa, while some educationalists believe that universities should accept equal numbers of both genders in every subject. They have convincing reasons in this regard.

These universities, which assert that there should be differences between men and women for attending every subject, believe that these two sexes are very different in many ways. They think men are ~~have~~ cut out for strength-related areas as opposed to their female counterparts who are much more suitable for art subjects or every other skill which is related to emotional perception.

Although this approach in some ways can be acceptable according to their nature and character, it is one-sided argument. Not only can ~~does~~ this point of view ~~can~~ be biased, but also that is an over-generalization because there are always exceptions to every rule. If deprived of going to a ~~one~~ specific subject, one gender ~~it~~ may develop some complexes. ~~to them~~. Furthermore, it might lead to society losing some talented individuals who are intelligent in some majors. Moreover, it brings about ignoring human ~~right~~rights. In ~~an~~other words, it is making discriminations among females and males.

In conclusion, I would argue that if authorities pave the way for accepting both sexes with ~~at~~ the same portion in every educational branch, it would be a brilliant opportunity to discover some talents who can serve society ~~and the community~~. On the other hand, throughout the history we have had men and women who have achieved goals in what might have seemed far-fetched to many at the time.~~some strange fields which were apparently against their genders~~.
