

Nowadays most of the urgent problems can only be solved through international cooperation. To what extent do you agree or disagree with this statement?

Our world is becoming more like a global village, and it seems that every issue anywhere around the world affects all the countries more or less. Therefore, the idea that tackling such a situations everywhere on the earth needs an international effort to be addressed, has been emphasized recently.

Many sociologists believe that dealing with the pressing problems urgent events which have been-occurred for any government is incumbent on all other countries, inasmuch as their ir adverse effects of such problems sooner or later will be felt/seen/experienced noteworthy not only in that particular region, district, but also and even in physically far countries. For example, the current war in Syria has not only impacted the life of Syrians s people, but also an the immense /huge/considerable/large/vast number of refugees have become became a burden on European countries which are targeted by locals of war-torn provinces who have lost their shelter. Experts assert that if other countries, especially European ones, had have helped the government of Syria to tackle the rebels from the beginning, they would never have encountered with the problem of numerous war-displaced persons.

On the other hand, some people are of the opinion that any no effort in should be spared to solving problems which happen to other countries might be interpreted as considered as interfering in their internal affairs private issues. For instance, the government of Syria has accused the United Nations organization and some other countries of interposing its civil/internal war with opponents, and arming them against central administration of the country. Besides, many critics claim that interference of other nations, financially or militarily physically, in such events not only would not help to eradicate the issue, but also will lead to a chaos in to sorting out the problem.

From my point of view, intruding into events which others have encountered with suddenly without their permission or awareness will fail to address the problem. However, under certain circumstances that a disaster-stricken nation obviously could not help itself to survive or people are massacred, United Nations s organization and other countries are responsible for to controlling the situation even by means of using military forces. Although such actions might not return everything back to the previous state, at least they it can cut down the gravity of the rate of consequences.

To conclude, I certainly believe that some urgent problems need a global support to struggle with. Therefore, all the countries should join forces ~~their hands~~ to resolve such events in conditions where ~~that~~ it ~~they~~ would become internationally hard to solve problems.
