

Disruptive school students have a negative influence on others. Students who are noisy and disobedient should be grouped and taught separately.

Do you agree or disagree?

Normally, there are always some rebellious students in all schools. Although it may seem ~~seems~~ to be better to group and teach them separately since they affect other students negatively, there are some underlying reasons which prevent educationalists from doing that.

These students who disturb educational environments, usually create a happy atmosphere in class which is enjoyable even for studious students to experience that. For example, those unruly individuals either in recreation or class time do or say something funny that could be interesting for others so that it might decrease the sense of monotony and stress of class.

Moreover, it would be beneficial for young people to interact with all types of characters at school, because it could be an invaluable experience thereby obtaining their socialization skills for adulthood, for it is impossible to divide different people in distinctive groups in the community.

Furthermore, if they do not communicate~~d~~ with various personalities, students might not grow in many aspects. For instance, joining with those who are exactly similar to themselves, pupils might be isolated. As a result, they fail to dare encounter~~ing~~ other people. Not only may they suffer from inhibition, but also they will more likely be spoiled and dependent people.

In conclusion, since school plays a key role in educating young people, it can be considered a small model of real society. Therefore, it would be better ~~off~~ that children strengthen their socializ~~ation~~ingation skills by living and studying beside a variety of personalities thereby living easier in future.
