

In many countries, students must leave school because of their poor behaviors. Some people think it is a good idea, while others argue that there are other ways to solve this problem. Discuss both views and give your opinion.

In some nations, disruptive students are expelleding from school due to their misbehavior. While some opine that unruly pupils have to leave the school, many others are opposed to this point of view and claim cited it might be possible to approach the problem in a different way.

First and foremost, some people argue that disruptive schoolchildren should expel be expelled from institutes because they would undermine the valuable time of the class and disturb others' learning process by making noise during classes. Thus, teachers should be able to ask them to leave in order to prevent them from wasting teachers's time on trying to maintain classroom order rather than in spite of teaching the given lesson. If the unruly pupils leave, the class will would gain its peace and also edify other students by this action.

On the other hand, in many people's view there are means to address this problem for example, there are psychological methods which assist teachers in controlling those misbehaviors in a proper way, one of which is giving mischief responsibilities in the class and keeping getting them busy plus helping them grow growing a sense of responsibility in them. Hence, those methods can mend their indiscipline and above all, they can continue their study in the institute. Therefore, the challenge could be settled rather than getting worse by asking them to leave.

By way of conclusion, there are strong arguments on both sides. After analyzing I believe that schoolchildren deserved to be given a chance, because they have the ability to be a useful person and expelling them will not make them compliant versatile.
