

Children over 15 should be allowed to make decisions about their lives without the interference of their parents or teachers. Society should accept that children mature at a younger these days and should adjust the law accordingly.

Do you agree or disagree?

Undoubtedly, in this modern-day world, as young people are exposed to excessive information due to the development of technology, they have become mature earlier than the past, then the community is obliged to ~~adopt~~ adapt/adjust the law ~~for to~~ this phenomenon, but it should not lead ~~could not be led~~ their parents not to get involved interfere in their lives.

Nowadays, children are well-informed about various issues in life, especially because of the important role of social media in their everyday lives. Therefore, they are significantly knowledgeable at an early age compared to that of the older generation so that they are able to make some decisions independently about their lives. As a result, the ~~a~~ first step is for the government to introduce laws in order to institutionalize/establish ~~prove~~ their right in this regard. For example, one proper way is considering them responsible for their education. That means, they are to be given a chance to choose their educational subject without their adults's interference and pressure.

However, abandoned left to their own devices ~~on their own~~, children might create many serious problems. Not only, can they pose some problems for themselves, but also for society. If not supervised by adults, children might become delinquent, for they have not adequate experience for living totally alone, in which case they are probably faced with major crises ~~crisis~~ and therefore, , they in order to need to be assisted by some seasoned individuals including their parents and teachers.

In conclusion, I would argue that, society would had better accept those children as mature, allowing deserving them to benefit from some specific laws, in which case it would enable them to develop a sense of independence as well as responsibility although it does not n't mean that they are major, but they are seriously needed to be monitored and supported by wise members of their family and society.
