

Some people feel lonely living in high rise apartment blocks, while others prefer this kind of living. Give your opinion and examples from your own experience.

Nowadays, with the remarkable increase in the number of people who live in cities, being accommodated in apartments has become more popular than ever before. However, the increasing rate of such tendency has sparked heated controversies among critics about its pros and cons.

Many believe living in such small spaces will lead people to depression. These are crowded apartments which have ~~has~~ no soul, inasmuch as nobody knows their neighbors. Having no private yard for children to play, these compact spaces would not afford ~~propose~~ children enough room to have activity inside either ~~too~~. In addition, the noise which is the consequence of crowd in such accommodations disturbs other people.

Proponents, however, claim that apartments ~~has~~ have lower charge rates than houses. (development????) Besides, they are safer places to live in as a result of numerous people who come and go. Not only do these blocks usually have a common space where ~~which~~ locals can gather and communicate, but also making friends and mastering their living skills, children can play in these spaces. In fact, families have a better chance to make establish relationships in such colonies.

To conclude, considering my personal experience of living in apartments, although they could not provide ~~prepare~~ a family with more privacy and calmness as a place to live in, the expense of maintenance of houses besides the benefits of living in an apartment outweigh the above mentioned drawbacks of apartment accommodation. Therefore, I think people who have chosen to spend their life in such spaces should adopt ~~aim~~ a measure at dealing with the sense of loneliness.