

In many countries schools have severe problems with student behavior.

What do you think are the causes of this?

What solutions can you suggest?

In many places today, schools have extreme problems with children's behavior. Although there are so many well-educated teachers who have simply perceived this problem throughout their career, they usually cannot afford to manage children's behavior pattern in a best way.

Many factors are involved in this issue, in fact young students are under firm pressure both mentally and physically. By that I mean they have been placed in a situation that neither are they are children nor adult. Because of this unstable condition they are mostly getting confused and angry about trivial things and also they may react harshly. ~~In from~~ my point of view, this is a natural occurrence which may happen in every man's life especially in this sensitive period.

However, teachers and parents play a role key ~~in leading to lead~~ students into a correct way of life. They must teach them how to get on with their peers by engaging them in group activities and also how to share their feelings or experiences among themselves. The moot point is both parents and teachers should have a link to each other in order to assess the progress whether everything goes well or not.

So overall, I believe that by understanding students and accepting them as they are, not only does the situation begin to improve but they also ~~found find~~ the parents and teachers as their best friends which this circumstance paves the way for their success.
