

Some experts believe that it is better for children to begin learning a foreign language at primary school rather than secondary school. Do the advantages of this outweigh the disadvantages?

Today, learning a foreign language ~~has~~ plays a key role in education systems. Many schools even have started to teach different ~~types of~~ foreign languages at the same time in primary schools. Meanwhile, some educationalists ~~are~~ disagree with this ~~respect~~ /trend.

A large number of educationalists claim that coping with a learning foreign language at an early age has added benefits and if you miss the chance at this stage you should practice harder as you grow older to reach the intended target. It is said that a much higher proportion of students who have begun learning another language at primary schools have become more interested in acquisition of a language learning.

Moreover, ~~research~~ has highlighted that mental development of students during primary schools ~~have~~ has considerable progress rather than in secondary schools but having said that many believe teaching educating much information to primary students may get them bored or ~~put~~ push lots of pressure on them, inasmuch as children at this point need more time playing around and also exploring the outside world besides having fun with the other pupils.

All in all, I, ~~personally~~ personally, believe that it would be great to provide such a situation for students where ~~that~~ they could learn new skills in order to create an enjoyable environment. By that I mean not only should we start to teach children from primary schools, but we also should develop a condition in which children feel thoroughly enthusiastic instead of bored.
