

Some people say children no longer need to develop handwriting skills. Other believe that handwriting is still important.

Discuss both of these views and give your opinion.

All traditional means that human beings have invented and developed for long time, nowadays seems to be changing and the writing skill is not an exception. Now, there is controversy over forcing new generations to work on their handwriting or even whether they should be writing by hand or not.

From the perspective of those who believe in to writing scripting by hand, there are some circumstances which-where the quality of handwriting proves its importance. For instance, when someone has to write some things in-on a whiteboard in front of his-or her their colleagues or classmates or even in an exam, he or she will be concerned about prejudgments. Indeed, these people believe that scrawling can reveals their weaknesses or conversely, the art of producing beautiful writing manifests the owner's intelligence. The result of this viewpoint is that children have to dedicate more time to on the scripting skill instead of their real requirements.

On the other hand, many, usually young and prospective, follow new technologies and truly believe that new generations do not need to waste their time any more on improving handwriting. By introducing various electronic devices like laptops, smartphones and tablets, these days, people demand to learn typing rather than writing. Moreover, there are many applications that prepare tremendous options for editing and decorating and it will not be too far away when we will just speak and computers catch it in a note.

In conclusion, by looking back on human history, we will notice that traditional methods will be replaced with newer ones sooner or later and therefore, we should be awake when it is time to change for future generations as well as and also us.
