

Some people think that parents should teach children how to be a good member of society. Others, however, believe that school is the place to teach this. Discuss both these views and give your own opinion.

There is a controversial issue that a great number amount of people put children's social behavior teachings as responsibilities of their parents while in contrast, schools are going to be considered as the place of forming students to be good members s of for society.

Many scientists argue that school help kids to learn essential skills for better performing, not only as an individual but also in the role of a society member. They believe children have been achieving this ability by being in multicultural places like schools and even more, they think social education should be counted as school teachers ' responsibilities.

According to new findings, more than 46 percent of humans's personality will be shaped in family and each children spend dt more-most of their time at home rather than being in school. Although the role of school for social training is not negligible, children's behaviors mostly will be affected by their parents' manners. For instance, a mother whose-who is suffering from social society phobia /introverted/reserved should not have the expectation of having sociable kids. This statement is generally correct, but time to time a few expectations have been seen /observed/witnessed by researchers.

in conclusion, I agree with those findings which insist on the consideration of parental teachings in higher priority rather than school's roles in social teachings for students, for being better members in their society. Parents are the first teachers for each kids and for sure they have the most effect on their behavior.
