

Some people believe that there should be fixed punishments for each type of crime. Others, however argue that the circumstances of an individual crime, and the motivation for committing it, should always be taken into account when deciding on the punishment.

Discuss both these views and give your own opinion.

Due to the high rate of criminal activities between individuals, ~~the~~ society has become a fairly dangerous place and people should be completely conscious about their properties. The idea of what kinds of laws should be legislated has sparked a heated debate between authorities. Some of them assume that they had better introduce some strict rules regarding punishment as opposed to ~~some~~ others who claim that the cause of committing crime and the background of criminals are significant criteria.

Some ~~times-times~~ people get into an unexpected conflict because they are anxious. Whilst they are not a wrongdoer at all. In fact they are persuaded to fight against their fighter /engage in self-defense. In this way they may hit her/him which and it is considered an inappropriate action/deed/behavior ~~disobedient activity~~. Governmental figures should imagine themselves in that situation and predict their reactions whether they could avoid fighting or not. Furthermore, not only had they better do they had better take that situation and the atmosphere of the crime place into consideration, but also they should focus much more on that person in terms of psychological problems. For instance, some members of the public take medicines because they are nervous or even have some mental/psychological spiritual issues. What is more, there is an undeniable differences between people with an evil soul/wicked personality and ~~some~~ others who did not attempt to commit crime but it ~~is~~ happened. It means that the previous acts of them should not be forgotten.

On the other hand, some researchers assume that the more laxity in laws, the more crime rates in the society. That introducing some fixed laws warns people is ~~a~~ proven fact and it which leads to reducing crime waves.

On the whole, I, personally, believe that the reasons of offenders might be reasonable /understandable and authorities should consider them.
