

Some people would like to experience the same things while the other prefer to experience changes in their lives ...discuss both view and say your opinion and example

When it comes to changes in our lives, there are two groups of people available. The first group do not think about changes and would like to experience the same things. Meanwhile, the other group are willing to have changes in their daily routine whenever possible and I myself prefer to support this group of people .

There are some reasons about why a group of individuals are keen on keeping their day to day activities without even small changes. The first and foremost issue is the fear of the unknown which is reflecteds in their lives as phobia. A case in point , technophobes people whose understanding about cutting-edge technologies modernities is linked with a huge amount of fear . furthermore, they would like to be sure about the way they live. From a psychological point of view, when they experience their lives without significant problems and also they are used to their lifestyle, they find it difficult to change their trends. /complacency

On the other hand, for many good reasons, change is an integral part of life for a significant number of people. According to their point of view a large number of inventions and innovations have been caused by risk propensity /risk-taking. As figures show almost all of break-throughs during humans's life are derived by the change attitude which is manifested effectively done by in scientists' risks as risk takers. Secondly, as the statistics show, there are five groups of risk propensity which are respectively financial, health and safety , recreational , ethical , social . In each one of the groups , individuals follow their goal for the greater opportunity which ranges from investment to absorbing attention of the others . last but not least, on the scale of certain aspects such as humor , outgoingness and even adventure can be incentive factors to experience risk in each new phase of life humans enter. For example, moving to a the new city, wearing unconventional clothes, changing career and even the sexual aspect in charming to charm the opposite sex /other gender. Thrill seekers find it easy to use the change to achieve their goal when they strongly believe that people only regret the chances they did not take.

In conclusion, although both of the groups discussed above have reasonable reasons to continue their trend, I would like to support the risk takers where when the meaning of life is linked with the change.

VAHID TAVAZOEI