

There are many different types of music in the world today. Why do we need music? Is the traditional music of a country more important than the international music that is heard everywhere nowadays?

People love to listen to music on in all occasions, some or at all. As for the group who listens to music of any kind, there must be a reason why they do so. This may bring us to ~~the answer to~~ another question as to what type of music better aims for the goals of its audience, the native or the international one.

On one hand, listening to music per se could be considered a goal. A majority of people listen to music simply to hear it. The melodic content of a piece of music, the rhythm changing every once a second, the crescendo and decrescendo tones as well as the tempo at which the piece is played, affects the emotions and feelings of the audience, excites and inspires them. As a scientific document, psychologists acknowledge the effects of what we hear on how we feel. On the other, music can provide people with a pleasant atmosphere whether or not they are listening to it. That's why people listen to music when they are sedentary or while doing any activities imaginable that ~~can be imagined~~, namely doing exercises or even studying.

Nostalgia fills people when they hear a song or a piece of music they used to listen to. Seemingly, non-native music cannot entertain people like this. Yet, there are things that exotic music can do, functions that the national music of a state cannot perform. There comes the exotic music to play its role just as you want to do something at a high tempo, for example, or where someone tends to feel entirely different than the character of the place they need to be in. This way, both types of music seem to be of significant use.

Reasons for which people listen to music differ from spending time hearing what they are fond of to changing their feelings as a therapy to providing themselves and those around with a better atmosphere. To aim for all these goals, people might need both national and international music.
