

Many people go abroad for higher studies. Do the advantages outweigh the disadvantages ?

These days studying abroad has become highly popular among university students. They prefer to continue their education in foreign countries which has its own pros and cons.

To begin with, I am going to mention some advantages of this decision. Studying abroad is an excellent opportunity to get to know another culture and broaden experience which is often only obtained by living in the destined country. Furthermore, students will have the chance to meet people from different countries and backgrounds, so they will be able to share their ideas in different topics. In addition, students can learn a new language. Not only is this a new skill, but also this will help them to become more like a local. The other positive point that must be mentioned is the independence that studying in a foreign country brings to students. They will learn how to stand on their own feet and tackle problems.

On the other hand, there are some disadvantages of studying abroad. Culture shock could be considered the most important one. They must learn how to adapt themselves to the new environment and behave according to the host country's rules and regulations. This process may take a long time and usually students feel a bit disappointed during this period. Moreover, learning a new language could be quite challenging for some individuals who do not know even a word of it.

In conclusion, studying in a foreign country is a big decision and has its benefits and drawbacks. All the aspects of it must be considered by students before taking any action.
