

There are a lot of people who are of idea that tourists visiting other countries are ought to respect the local rules and laws while some others are strongly against reasoning that this might have a negative impact on the tourism industry, and discourage travelers ~~from visiting to visit~~ those countries. When it comes to this notion, I hold the idea of respecting people in a way that no one ~~is be~~-offended. ~~I will elaborate this in the following paragraphs in more details with relevant examples.~~

Visiting a new place with even a slight difference in culture and way of living has always had its own attractions, and I think that is why the tourism industry is one of the most prosperous industries since years ago. However, we do not have to forget that in the host country, some people are not involved in tourism in anyway and visitors are not allowed to disturb their normal way of life. To clarify this point we know that in some parts of the world not only do ~~not~~ people not drink alcoholic beverages but also it is considered against their religious ~~believes~~beliefs. In such cases I think tourists s must follow local rules and customs.

On the other hand, there some others who claim that tourists must feel free to do anything in the host country. This group of people reason that local people are earning money from tourists, so they have to be open-minded to even bizarre behaviors of their guests. They claim any restriction can lead to a dramatic decrease ~~in of~~ incoming rates of visitors, and this brings about a disaster to the businesses such as hotels, travel agencies, ~~means of~~ transportation and even restaurants. A very clear ~~of this~~ example is Thailand, ~~in Thailand~~where people respect tourists and provide them with any kind of services they demand, and that is the secret of attracting millions of visitors from around the globe every day.

To make a long story short, I think mutual respect is the best way of approaching this subject. I believe that both the visitors and the hosts have to respect each other, and any kind of disrespect or unfamiliar behaviors may result in a disaster. I wish for a day every human being respects the others, and I believe this is the only way to worldwide peace.
