

Some people say that the only reason for learning a foreign language is in order to travel to or work in a foreign country. Others say that these are not the only reasons why someone should learn a foreign language.

These days, learning new languages is quite common among people. many believe that they learn new languages for visiting new countries or working in other countries. Others say that learning a new language is not limited to travel or working prospects only. This essay will discuss these arguments before arriving at a logical conclusion.

On one hand, it is quite normal that people want to learn a foreign language only to be able to communicate with people who speak this language. One of the most important requirements to immigrate as a skilled worker is language. Employees should be capable ~~to of~~ negotiatinge with their colleagues and their customers for delivering tasks and presenting products. Also it is common to learn the language of the target destination for tourists. They can talk or shop better than those who do not know the local languages. Nowadays, Iranians are going to Germany for entertainment purposes more than before and are mostly of them ~~are~~ studying German before their journey.

On the other hand, we are living in a modern and boundless world, so learning new languages is going to be a ~~most~~must. A highly elusive/unattainable benefit of learning a language is education. These days, if people want to study overseas or ~~they want to~~ read what other sciences are working on like books and articles, they should have the ability to understand the language of those subjects. Also as mentioned before when an experienced person desires to work with a state-of-~~the~~-art device, they should know how to read its manuals. In addition, when someone ~~is are~~ learning a new language they will know about other countries' culture and they will understand other nations' customs. Then they will make friends from other nations.

In conclusion, I strongly