

Many people assume that the goal of every country should be to produce more materials and goods.

To what extent do you agree or disagree that constantly increasing production is as appropriate goal?

In today's societies, it is widely argued that whether permanent production of substances and yields is an apt way that some governments employed. In this essay both sides of the view will be discussed. ~~In~~ from my points of view, every country is required to promote their ir economic status through international trade. So that it would be feasible manner to advance the people's livelihood (means of support), which ~~are~~ is directly influenced by the level of give and take with other countries (neighbors).

To begin with, the foremost priority of any state is expanding the relation with other realms. The approach that is employed is export and import of an array of goods, which not only promotes s the political relations, but also could establish a right completion?? situation in the region as well. What is more, in various parts of the world there is consensus that superior power is described d as a much more potent in international market. Meanwhile, if the government boost the fundamental economic climate, it could be propel the countries toward ~~to~~ the inner/domestic market. Afterward, it would be expected to see the emerging of ~~the~~ a sustainable and dynamic economy.

Economy Economic growth has a social facet as well, for instance, developing quick-impact firms, advancing inge the prosperity of industries in whole aspects, which consequently leads to attracting ing more and more new force work. Those mentioned are directly linked with increasing the production of material and goods.

In contrary, it is told that over-focus on manufactory of properties and solids could be cause ~~to~~ disregard to other parts of the a community. Nevertheless, it is obvious that any fruitful civilization needs to possess a balance d condition in entire traits.

All in all, an advanced d economy has strongly entirely impacted ed entirely citizens' life. If it is faces a lack of economic prosperity, the government would be lagging behind in competition with its rivals s in the region. So ~~that~~ it is necessary to develop it through enlarging goods and materials production.