

Many people believe that they should spend most of their money on enjoying life at present. Others, however, think that they should save it for the future. Discuss both views and give your own opinion.

It's a controversial topic that no-one can ~~response~~ ~~respond to it~~ thoroughly yet. ~~By so~~ far there ~~has been is~~ no decision made by me for choosing either way but the aspect of 'live life to the full' is so tempting that ~~the~~ idea of losing money has no effect on us. As an almost frugal person I can't live life to the edge. Collecting money is a way to diminish my stress about ~~an~~ imaginary unstable future. However, there are significant numbers of men who want to lead a happy life with splurge and they don't debilitate themselves by contentment.

Which one is the right one? There is no exact answer but losing money in an irrational behaviour is a ~~guaranteed way show way~~ to guarantee a miserable ending. the humankind should balance between enjoying and providence as they should do in all other walks of life. ~~it's as bad enough as it is, being miserliness or prodigality.~~ We should choose a moderate way. As an experienced one, I can ~~instance cite~~ from both groups suffering from their ~~out-of-order disorderly~~ conduct.

Considering ~~these the following~~ pair ~~of~~ slogans in your living may lead to a happy life. first 'life has ~~it's its~~ ups and downs' and 'nothing lasts forever', ~~so~~ ~~So~~, we should bear in ~~our~~ mind that putting ourselves through contentment/~~complacency~~ may result in regret ~~later in life~~/in our senility for freedom we missed, as spending money without control may lead to misery. Our life should be fully supervised but not controlled rigorously. You have to think up how to manage your life ~~by~~ rationally and not emotionally, and this does not mean that being contentment is a redemption. Benefiting from a great deal of joy and happiness occurs by ~~moderating moderation~~.