

Some authors believe that urbanization is a modern disease to some extent do you agree or disagree

More and more people are migrating to cities in search of better life but city life can be extremely difficult. From my perspective, today's urban life is in-on the way to where-end-up-in a disaster for humanity.

In terms of economy, these days the cost of living is likely to be higher than it is in countryside and villages. Inhabitants of cities have to pay the-a higher price for housing, transport and even food. A case in point is relocated faormers who do not have enough resources to live the modern life, but what they can achieve is much more problems. Simply put, mass immigration to cities lies in urbanization which results in repercussions associated with population explosion.

With regard to criminals what can be seen is the high rate of crimes which is tied to ties-in urban life. When a huge number of individuals are supposed to live in cities, so this can be found difficult to supervise their crimes by authorities. That there is a mixture of the culture and different criminal backgrounds in cities can be regarded as an the obstacle in prevention of committing the crime. The effect of urbanization on the culture of society can be addressed while consumerism and materialism, as results of this event, are going to be prevalent. These new phenomena brings about serious problems such as global warming which can be catastrophic.

In the environmental terms, this occurrence can be seen from different angles. As a result of urbanization the trend toward moving cities and construction of high rise buildings and sky scrapers speeds up. The lower attention to the environmentally friendly issue can be tied to a hectic pace of urbanization. For instances, there are lots of resorts and animal habitats which have been-disappeared these days by considering wrong policiesy such as urban sprawl and construction of new towns. Where exactly this trend ends up in can be a big question for humanity while there is no tendency to think of the other creatures and wildlife. With this movement toward urbanization what can be left for the earth is merely a concrete jungle. In this situation global warming and melting ice caps will be unduly inescapable and humankinds enter to an uncharted territory in which the world can be ruined.

In conclusion, urbanization can be considered the unexpected disease for the globe and this problem can be deterioioerated unless governments and individuals take fundamental steps in order to reach a consensus for maintaining ~~of~~ the earth rather than urbanization.
