At this juncture, education is one of the most important factors all around the world. It is a controversial issue whether ~~that~~ going to school should be mandatory or children can be educated by their parents at home. I strongly opine that school is a better choice.

In my estimation, school is not just a place for studying. It has been scientifically proven that not only does attending school help children to educate, but it also ameliorates their social relations. In other words, children learn how to behave ~~with~~ towards each other in different situations and in comparison with children who are taught at home, they can display ~~express~~ a more reasonable attitude in society.

Furthermore, students can benefit from class activities, team works and workshops which are really useful for learning life skills. Besides, probably there are children with different cultures or even different religions in the same class. In that way they learn to accept and respect the differences. It will have an unforgettable impact on them and when they get older and enter ~~the~~ society they will interact far ~~more~~ better.

On the other hand, children from the poor, ordinary or rich families will learn to consider each other ~~as~~ friends or classmates and they will find out that financial situation ~~does not associate~~has nothing to do with friendship.

To wrap it up, I am of the conviction that parents who think it is better to keep their children at home and teach them by themselves, should study more about this issue. After that if they still insist (on it), it is better to take prompt measures to reduce the adverse effects of teaching at home.
