

Going abroad and living there as a student is being an ambition of many youngsters these days. A lot of people who are in the age of study are interested in continuing their education in some other countries except their own motherland, as they believe not only do they study there, but also get familiar with a new culture and language and many other new events , which are interested me as well.

From my point of view, living in a foreign country for schooling has its own difficulties and conveniences too. Most people who either have a plan to go to overseas or they have gone there for study, are youngsters, which is their first experience staying far from their homeland. Therefore, it is like a new adventure for them which broadens their horizon and helps s them boost their self-confidence. However, sometimes it causes them to feel lonely and homesick especially when they are emotionally disturbed and need someone very close and trustable.

Any countries have their own culture and custom, despite reading in the history books or watching any national Geography program on TV, still they are unaccustomed with-to those occasions. But understanding those rituals s and traditional events when they are presented there would help them to perceive those occurrences better. Moreover, it helps them try for adapting themselves to many differences which they have been facing them.

Furthermore, studying to-in any foreign country needs learning a new language. As a result, learning language is like opening a window to a new life. Being expert to-in any new language has many advantages, one simple example is finding jobs s easier. Knowing a new language enables them to have a worthy communication with a lot of new people and find new friends from a different country. That can be very helpful especially when you are alone there.

In brief, living in a different country helps people know the differences and learn how they can live and adapt themselves with-to new circumstances. It helps them, particularly young people, be more self-confident and experienced which is more usable for their future life.
