

Successful sports professionals can earn a great deal more money than people in other important professions. Some people think this is fully justified while others think it is unfair. Discuss both these views and give your own opinion.

For too many years, watching battles between two individuals or two groups of them has been one of the most favorite amusements for lots of nations around the world. This favorite enjoyment changed its shape into various sport matches in recent centuries. Accordingly constructing related basements for sports and providing facilities for training athletes have become a profitable field of investment for individuals or even governments. It is obvious that a part of these investments income which mostly comes from advertisements belongs to sport professionals as their salary which. Some people believe ~~that this salary~~ is too much in contrast with many other professions.

Someone wishing to become a well-paid athlete must be extraordinary talented and should make lots of efforts. Regarding their biographies most of the sport professionals have started trainings from childhood and moreover, sense of ambition and mental condition play an important role in their success. As a consequence, becoming a globally well-known athlete is an arduous progress and only a limited number of individuals can nail it.

However, if one tries to calculate amount of income according to hours of working, ~~would conclude that sport professionals are earning too much~~. Furthermore, some people believe that their profession is not productive as much as scientists', teachers' or lots of others' occupations.

In conclusion, chance of becoming a sport professional between too many rivals is very low and the more they wish to earn money, the more they should win competitions, it means that they are accepting too much risk because if they can't become a unique champion they will earn no money. Therefore, I believe they deserve what they achieve.
