

Some experts believe that it is better for children to begin learning a foreign language at primary school rather than secondary school.

Do advantages of this outweigh the disadvantages?

Today in most countries, educating a second language at schools is compulsory because learning a new language besides the national language helps children to have more abilities in their future. There are two opposite attitudes between/among experts about the proper age for initiation of this. While one group extremely insists on secondary school ~~another the other~~ group believes that this should happen at primary school. Both groups consider their own reasons in debates. Under certain conditions which will be discussed below, I personally agree with the second one.

In my opinion, the earlier a new language learning would be, the easier (it would be) for children to digest it. When I notice younger kids at age 5 or 6 I find them more active, courageous and eager to learn rather than those at 12 or 13 and it seems they ~~much more~~ enjoy learning something new much more. Moreover, most people can completely understand and speak their mother tongue at 3 or 4, this is a piece of an evidence that the human brain has more ability to memorize vocabularies at earlier ages. /capacity

On the other hand, if teachers at primary schools cannot be successful to arouse children's interest in learning ~~the a~~ a new language, it will make them bored. Have been disgusted by their teachers' wrong teaching method, children unconsciously would hate learning new languages forever.

In summary, if the education system ~~be is~~ is able to provide proper learning methods which contain appealing games or cartoons in order to keep kids interested, I believe that learning a second language at primary school will be a great deal more efficient for them.
