Living with people is an innate part of each human being. Upon ~~the~~ entrance ~~of us~~ in to a new place, at first we try to start connection with ~~those whom is~~ around you. Making friends is one of the easiest tasks for children in first day of school.

When you choose a friend similar to you, not only are you're more comfortable to share your concerns with them, but also they can understand you better. For example when you choose a friend with tough religiousa beliefs, it's so difficult to share most your opinions with her. In point of fact, the family of your friends, plays an important role in your friendship. Their financial position, ~~their~~ culture, and their beliefs can indirectly affect your friendship.

Besides, when you choose friends who are in the same field of work or education, you have more mutual points to discuss. In addition, you'll have more fun with people who have the same interest as you.

I opine, the advantages of friendship with similar people ~~is~~ are greater that of different ones. Your first friend in elementary school wouldn't be your best friend in the university period because as much as you growing up, you wish to have friendship with people ~~alike to~~ you, the hope is that it becomes long-lasting.
