In some countries an increasing number of people are suffering from health problems as a result of eating too much fast food. It therefore necessary for government to impose a higher tax on this kind of food.
To what extend do you agree or disagree with this opinion?

For better or worse the modern lifestyle has led ~~leads~~ to individuals relying on the pre-prepared meals and junk food containing large amounts of unhealthy ingredients giving ~~gave~~ rise to insurmountable difficulties.

First and foremost, the majority of health issues stem from both unhealthy meals and inappropriate diet, necessitating a plan of action to deal with irreparable consequences. In other words, although fast food has become ~~becomes~~ ubiquitous in metropolitan cities, it should be authorized by the government in order to enhance the public health of society. For instance, growing up with ~~in~~convenience meal/food portions, children will be afflicted by/with food-related problems involving the government in extra cost of public health. Only when the governments can diminish the public health care expenses, ~~are~~ will they be in charge of the fast food industry administration.

On the other hand, the governments are responsible for administration of the fast food industries by levying tax on their products. It means that, the lower price of ~~the~~ fast food is a significant individuals' motivation for ~~the~~ more consumption. By way of illustration, easily accessible to the fast food in overcrowded cities with reasonable price is considered an incentive ~~item~~ for fully occupied people who could not spend their time ~~for~~ cooking. Individuals consume a great deal of fast food, hence their health problems.

To put it in a nut shell, not only should the governments impose levy on fast food products, but also they have to shoulder the responsibility of controlling the quality of pre-prepared ingredients leading people to become healthy in order to lower the cost of public health care.
