Some people think that parents should teach children how to be good members of society. Others however, believe that school is the place to learn this. Discuss both views and give your own opinion.

The basis and the core of children's upbringing is family which shapes child's-their behavior and character. Similarly, since the second center of education is school, it plays an important role in teaching children to be good members of society. there are two different points of view about the responsibility of this subject that will be mentioned.

Clearly, the first people who whose an infant communicates with them are parents. the morality, culture, religious issues, social skills and the distinction between right and wrong are taught in a family environment and The behavioral model of parents affects on their child's's' personality. Not only is an infant affected by acquired patterns, but also by hereditary characteristics, hence the importance of parents' role in formation of moods. Therefore, paying attention to the reactions in different situations and also modifying the poor behavior is required by parents.

Obviously, the first social place that children enter in it is school that-where they learn social skills, interactions and other aspects of education there. Spending the most useful hours of the day at school, children are affected by their peers and schools officials. Some claims that most of the social anomalies and intransigent behaviors such as smuggling, drug dealing and addiction originate from school. The wrong method of teachers' training can lead to irreparable damages on the child's spirit and subconscious that has-have a direct effects on their future.

I opine that both parents and teachers are at one level responsible forin bringing up children and Their contribution of them for in shaping the community members is required. They can share their ideas and inform each other by holding consulting sessions and learning programs to reach /build a healthy society.
