

FATEMEH F

Topic: travel to Antarctic or the Sahara

Nowadays, as we all hear, the tendency for visiting the ~~hardly-achieving far-flung~~ resorts like the Sahara desert or Antarctica ~~a~~ is increasing among tourists. This phenomenon can have several impacts ~~including such as~~ negative or positive ones. This essay focuses on some of those paramount features.

To begin with, we can mention some precious experiences like getting familiar with ~~the~~ nature and Earth's creation causing some significant changes in tourists' mind and thought. For instance, when a visitor travels to ~~a~~ pristine nature, they will realize many oddly unwritten secrets that they may not know about ~~them~~ in their everyday life.

Secondly, I opine that acquiring unique experiences is a valuable gift that not all the people can face. These experiences can help them all long life as they were gathered so hard and were costly for them. They tolerated ~~d~~ awkward circumstances and walked long distances, hence their meritorious experiences.

On the other hand, although this kind of trip has excessively ~~merit positive~~ characteristics, there are some threats that should not be neglected like death, ~~getting lost~~ in the snow, ~~or lost~~ in the avalanche and also death due to hanger or thirstiness. When we hear or read about these hazards we definitely not fully understand how scary they are. Only when a human faces one of these problems, will they recognize how dangerous and deadly they are, so they should be always reminded to tourists as some of the most important risks of the trip. Additionally, the process of this type of travel is not only capital-intensive but also time-consuming as they should travel by ~~ship the ships~~ to reach the Antarctic or by the camels to reach the Sahara.

To put in a nutshell, due to all the above-mentioned factors, it seems intriguing to visit the places that ~~few humans less human have has~~ reached before. However, the dangers should be taken into consideration too ~~in that .In that~~, some say the more risky the trip, the more enthralling it is.