

Today more and more tourists are visiting places where conditions are difficult, such as the Sahara ~~d~~Desert and the Antarctic.

What are the benefits and disadvantages for tourists who visit such places?

nowadays tourists tend to investigate new and also natural places, such as the Sahara ~~d~~Desert or the Antarctic ~~where-which~~ both have extreme climates. In my opinion, the first reason is to satisfy both their ~~both~~ curiosity and a sense of explorationseeker. However, on some occasions, it has a potentially negative effect on the environment.

These days, ~~due to~~in this rapidly changing world, people have access to the internet and also they share their vast majority of experiences in every fields ~~s~~ and one of which them is travelling. Not only are some of them guiding others, but they also express its paramount features, such as the weather, hence people especially experts who study about the environment are keen on ~~to~~-searching about either remote areas or unknown places. Some of them pave the way for tourists s who have a desire to see these pristine regions by addressing problems related to their conditions. In some situations, the more difficult the condition you tolerate, the more ~~both~~-enjoyable and valuable memory you have.

Despite the benefits that travelling to such places ~~are~~-provided ~~d~~ for us, it also has its own dangers. For example, bad weather conditions that may endanger either our health or our lives, by the same token wild life, especially animals or poisonous insects that live there. To deal with these dangers, we must travel in a group. The other one that is getting lost in those areas s because of the similarity of that environments in terms of covered with snow or sand. On the other hand, it is up to us that we are not going to interfere in their residents' lifestyle.

In conclusion, travelling always has advantages for visitors even in hard situations, hence we must benefit from this condition to learn from it and without that, the benefits ~~are~~ is legion.