

Some people prefer to live in a house, while others feel that there are more advantages to living in an apartment.

Are there more advantages than disadvantages of living in a house compared with living in an apartment?

In the past, the concept of living in a shared and compressed area never ~~comes~~ came to people's mind and most people were living in private houses. ~~By introducing with the introduction~~ of modern life and human ability in construction ~~of~~ skyscrapers, however, the apartment was added to house buyers' or renters' options. Now, the question is which one is more suitable for us, living in a concreted capsule or possessing a quietly small house?

~~The~~ first and foremost, when we own a house, we will have ~~the~~ privacy. Consider a crowded apartment ~~that where/in which~~ you have to deal with unfamiliar people and you do not have the freedom to do what you like. For instance, you cannot simply listen to your favourite music loudly or host large parties until one or two ~~of in the~~ morning, or in most apartments having pets is prohibited. Actually when we decide to live in a residential complex, we have to obey many ~~red tapes~~ rules and regulations.

Moreover, usually apartment residents have to share resources together, and they are not permitted to alter them by their own decision. For example, yards and gardens are shared, and some restricted rules ban you from growing ~~up~~ your vegetables ~~in~~ there.

In addition, it seems when you buy a private house, you own a piece of land, not a space on other roofs. Owning a land gives people ~~a~~ feeling of peace~~ful~~; but if, owing to any natural disasters, your house is destroyed, you will have a land to build it again and these ownership conditions induce feel of confidence to the landlord.

In conclusion, while living in an apartment has some undeniable benefits like low costs in services and maintaining, ~~a~~ security feeling, more chances for communication and getting help and support by more neighbours, it would be more ~~pleasure~~ pleasant for humankind, the sense of possession, freedom and solitude in their territories.
