

In some countries today, there is an attitude that "anyone can do it" in the arts- music, literature, acting, art, etc. As a result, people with no talent become rich and famous and genuine talent is not valued or appreciated. Do you agree or disagree?

It is obvious that genuine talent and smart people are always valued these days but ~~in-~~ for some reasons they cannot represent ~~it~~ their aptitude. Throughout this essay I will give several considerations relating to my notion.

Everyone is considered talented, however the question is whether they can develop their potential. ~~whether is talented-born or talented-trained the can't show.~~ It is because of cultural and financial poverty ~~and financial poverty~~. As soon as they go-are in the right from their place they can show ed their talent.

On the other hand, there are ~~we have some~~ people who, because they have closer relationships with the boss or director, they got-are in a strategic position. Today's some people, because of their technical knowledge, they can create their own movie and music without needing a lot of other musical instruments industry and also they can share it on social media. Therby becoming (Therefore, they become) famous without spending lots of money. By having a network we can easily get a job even though we do not have natural or genuine talent.

Every people-one wants to be a famous artist because of the popularity and a huge salary. This leads to a complicated problem for-in finding the true talents. It is true that everyone has their own luck and deserves to get the chance but it cannot be denied that for a particular job such as artistry they need special ability and capacity.

To sum up, to be a famous person, people should have the capability which can impress people. I disagree that people get that job only because of luck and no attempt to get the position. They should make every effort/spare no effort/have serious attempt to tackle their problems.
