

Some people claim that not enough of the waste from homes is recycled. They say that the only way to increase recycling is for governments to make it a legal requirement. To what extent do you think laws are needed to make people recycle more of their waste?

---

Not only is using trash~~es~~ for making new objects an adequate way to reduce the amount of utilized raw materials, but also it can assist us in decreasing the cost of creating many products. In my opinion, if we do not employ a law to force people to recycle their rubbish, we would get better results.

The first disadvantage of rules is that when we introduce a new law, we should supervise ~~on~~-executing it. Therefore, we require a new organization for this task and it can cost the government a lot/excessively. Also, we should set some punishments for those who disobey the law and punishing is not a proper solution to obligate people to recycle their own trash~~es~~.

Secondly, we are not well aware about the consequences of forcing our citizens to reuse their garbage. It has ~~been~~-occurred many times that pushing people too hard into an action/doing something, had reverse feedbacks. Consequently, we cannot make people doing-do what they do not like by adopting new laws.

~~In spite of~~rather than/instead of compelling people to recycle their junk with-by creating new laws, which has its own drawbacks, we can teach ~~to~~-our young generation to reuse their waste. Although it would take a huge-long time before a great percentage of the community learn to do recycling, we can stop/prevent from many unnecessary costs in future.

In conclusion, if we enforce some rules to push/obligate people to recover their own trash~~es~~, we may confront ~~with~~-some problems, including the difficulty of enforcing the law and ~~resisting-resistance~~against obeying these orders, hence we should educate our citizens to be responsible ~~with-by~~ recycling their own garbage.