

Euthanasia, or mercy killing, has been in the news more and more recently. Many people are strongly against such a practice, but there is a growing demand to have it legalized. Do you agree or disagree with euthanasia being made legal?

Terminating someone's life who is experiencing nothing except suffersuffering might be an act of kindness. Many prefer to be dead instead of living in pain. In my opinion, we should allow this action to be happening, but we must introduce extremely restrictive rules for it.

Some sick people become broody after a period of time and may wish to end their life. They might lose hope to become healthier or they become tired of the consequences of their disease or the treatment they should take to get better. As a result, they prefer to be dead rather than being alive and suffer. In this case, they should be given hope and help to become more optimistic about life by consultants.

There are some other people who have faint hope to get back to a normal life. Although they are in suffering and their treatment process costs s extraordinarily, they should make their best effort to defeat their sickness and become healthy again. It is our duty to support them in any aspect they need like providing solid firm-asinsurances or emotional supports.

The only group of ill people who are allowed to end their life are the ones who are terminally sicknot only did doctors refuse them to get better, but also they are getting worse every day. Their pain is unbearable and they are unable to do anything. Also, both the patient and his family should agree on this hard decision.

In conclusion, some diseases can make living unbearable. The harder these sicknesses become, the more our patient's desire to die. We must separate those who may survive from that illness from their sick counterparts who have no hope and are only suffering by creating /introducing truly precise /clear laws.
