

Some people believe that there should be fixed punishments for each type of crime. Others, however, argue that the circumstances of individual crime, and the motivation for committing it, should always be taken into account when deciding on the punishment.

Discuss both these views and give your own opinion.

There are two different approaches encountering criminals, whether punishments should be fixed for each type of maleficence or the situation and mainspring of every crime should be considered. In my opinion, although each crime's reasons and wherefores should be envisaged, it is a hard work task though. In what follows, I will discuss more.

Firstly, there is a perspective that each felony should have a certain penalizing, in this belief, there is a stable law for each crime type to be sentenced-delivered regardless of the driving force. For instance, if a pedestrian is killed in a car accident, it is not taken into account if it was the fault of the murdered himself, that is to say, it was a deliberate suicide, but the rule is always against the driver in my country, Iran. Although this is a terrible occurrence with a fixed punishment, it may ruin an individual's life that had no deliberate purpose of killing someone. Hence, I think this kind of collision-approach is unjustified.

Secondly, there is another sight-perspective from in which the crime type is considered through the whole situation and reason-the grounds that helps the sentence to be more justified. Particularly, there are, biologically speaking, unhealthy people that have the are-potential to be murderers. For an-example, the serial killer murderer-of-chained-killing who does not has-not have a very little brain part _called Libido_ in his brain has no idea about the feelings and consequences of somebody's death. So, it is better to send such criminals to madhouses/mental institution and take medical care of them, in this way, it may possibly ye to keep them away from society and get him-them back to a healthier life.

In conclusion, two aspects of punishments whether sentencing via fixed rules for each crime type or a scrupulously process of looking for reasons has-have lots of differences for the criminals, and as a result for the whole society. As I mentioned my point-of-view, I, personally, think the world would be a better place if we do-did care for each type of personality and their acts in order not to judge and decide with no concern of motivation deep downbelow.