

Many people nowadays travel abroad for their university education.

Why do people do this and would /will you consider doing this yourself?

Traveling abroad for the purpose of education has been an old habit in many countries of the world, especially developing ones, since long time ago. People might choose to study in other parts of the world due to different reasons, ~~that~~ some of which encourage me to experience the same as well.

Most of the recognized and top-ranking universities of the world are located mostly in developed western countries, so many students in less developed societies may wish to continue their education where they are exposed to more cutting-edge teaching methods and advanced reading materials. Moreover, the access to high-tech equipment which ~~are-is~~ available only in some particular educational institutes is also of paramount importance for some specific majors such as genetics, agriculture or architecture.

The other contributing factor in deciding to embark on studying overseas is the desire to engage in another culture and experience a new environment. For instance, choosing to live in a foreign country, students have to learn the language spoken by locals to some extent~~ds~~ even if it is not the official language in which they are ~~thought-taught~~ at university. ~~Or they~~

Living in a foreign land equips people with several good skills and abilities as they practice to be independent which is the most appealing feature of studying abroad to me. I believe living alone develops our management skills such as decision making or time management because we are responsible for ~~our~~ every single action of ours, so that we should put as much effort as possible to perform our duties better.
