

In many countries, children are engaged in some kind of paid work. Some people regard this as completely wrong, while others consider it valuable work experience, important for learning and taking responsibilities. What are your opinions on this?

Although children are mostly responsible to study and play, lots of them are experiencing some kind of paid activity professions as well. They cannot be definitely a versatile work force at those ages, hence the opposition of parents against working. ~~Despite-unlike the~~ first group, some persuade their child to live in such a condition so that they become more responsible. This essay discusses these two different opinions.

That an early job can result in some diversions in children's behavior and thought is an undeniable fact. For instance, some teenagers lose their passion to pursue their education when they enjoy the money they earn in a part-time job. They desire to pass a hundred-year path ~~through-one-nightovernight~~ and get wealthy. Some others build friendship with people of various ages and with different values of life at the work place. In that case, not only do they lose their former criteria of existence but also they might never be the same again. Even some anti-social behaviors and approaches are possible to form in them.

On the other hand, some people and parents agree with their children's engagement in such unfavorable possibilities, such parents insist on this method. By direct and in direct monitoring the atmosphere and relations, this approach promotes the social skills, responsibility and immediate response of children in critical circumstances. Indeed, firstly, they learn how to communicate with various groups of people, not just their peers. Secondly, having some duties obliges them to accomplish their tasks as well as earning money that gives them the joy of being independent.

To sum up, a remarkable number of humans-individuals opine that involvement of a child in some paid works might cause deleterious effects. Nonetheless, numerous people have the opposite attitude and encourage their offspring ~~to-in~~ this action. I do agree with the latter group though I am aware of its few disadvantages.
